Annie Corley Brodeur is also the daughter of actors, Al Corley, Jr. and Brodeur. Annie Corley Brodeur's mother was the star of the popular 1990s sitcom Designing Women and her father starred on the show, Gilmore Girls. Annie Corley Brodeur has grown up in a big league acting family. She never dreamed she'd get to do what she's doing now, but she was born in Hollywood, raised in Hollywood and still lives in Hollywood. Annie Corley Brodeur's wild childhood is the topic of the book, "A Girl In The Window," that she will release in October 2018. TV Fanatic Magazine sat down with Annie Corley Brodeur to discuss what it's like to grow up in Hollywood and how the 'Gilmore Girls' cast has changed over the years. You're growing up in Hollywood, just like your mother was. Well, that's very cool. You're actually an actress, just like your mother was. That's so great. What did you see as your first role? I've seen some of my first scenes on TV shows. I remember that I was in a Christmas episode of 'Designing Women.' I think that's my first one. Then, I remember playing a girl in the window on 'Gilmore Girls' as a Halloween episode. What did you see yourself doing when you were growing up? I wanted to be an astronaut. My father and I did an exercise, where he had us draw a blueprint of our "space ship." We drew the brain. My father said, "OK, who are you?" I said, "I'm Annie Corley." He said, "What are 82157476af
